New Hitachi Reversible Vibratory Plates Join Compaction Equipment Family

Hitachi Construction Machinery (Australia) Pty Ltd (HCA) today announces the extension of its compaction equipment line with the introduction of the Hitachi reversible vibratory plates. The new models further strengthen Hitachi's offering in the light equipment market.

The product line now comprises three reversible vibratory plate models (ZV250PR-G/ZV250PR-D/ZV350PR-De) and three vibratory plates (ZV40PF/ZV60PF/ZV80P). An additional rammer has also joined the existing product line with three rammer models now available (ZV55R/ZV65R/ZV75R).

The powerful Hitachi ZV-PR series reversible vibratory plates feature a stylish compact body for excellent workability and maneuverability on the worksite. A robust single piece cast engine frame delivers a high level of durability supported by a strengthened base plate. This offers easy cleaning by shaking off heaped soil and sand through compaction vibration.

From reinforced vibration-resistant designs, convenient operation and easy maneuverability through to compact yet powerful performance, Hitachi compaction equipment is the obvious choice. The compaction line is engineered to deliver powerful compaction force while limiting vibrations, reducing operator hand fatigue for greater productivity through longer operating hours.

Whether landscaping a residential property or upgrading a major highway, Hitachi compaction gear is designed to withstand the toughest compaction jobs. Alongside Hitachi's renowned construction equipment, the new reversible vibratory plates make a versatile addition to the product line.
